Jobs for Aldermen.

Now that the Legislature's taken franchise-giving power?

They're highly decorative, quite an ornament, 'tis true, For idleness is irksome and protracted loaning cloys-

And the rather pleasing duties of uniting happy pairs, After passing out franchises seems to be a trifle tame. How it galls upon the fellows as in helplessness they squirm, Where they can't hold up a railroad for the Murph and Gaffney firm,

There's no use of holding office where the pickings are so slim; No "good things" held up and "shalosn" at the word from Little Tim. For the M. O.'s are the rulers of the Aldarmanic roost, And the franchise graft has faded-no more melons to be loosed. So if in the hold up business we are taking 'way their all, We might leave to them the job of holding up the City Hall.

On pedestals of granite they could decorate the town, There to scare away the sparrows with an overbearing frown, With feathers in their bonnets they could stand in front of bars, Advertising to the people some new brand of punk cigars; They might delight the children playing endless games of ball. There is lots for them to do if they should want to work at all.
